Put Safety First with Farm Machinery

When operating farm machinery, injuries can happen in an instant. Incidents like rollovers and runovers can lead to life-altering injuries – or worse.

Every year, the lives of too many Canadian adults and children are lost or irreparably changed due to incidents involving farm machinery.

That's why it's crucial to stay vigilant about safety when using farm machinery. That includes never allowing extra riders on machinery, keeping bystanders – especially children – at a safe distance, adhering to manufacturer guidelines on towing restrictions, and using rollover protection structures and seatbelts.

It's important to keep in mind that while injuries related to farm machinery are often severe, they are also preventable.

This Canadian Agricultural Safety Week, let's make farm safety a part of our everyday. For more information, please visit agsafetyweek.ca.
